In many cases people incarcerated were facing underlying challenges that led to incarceration, including behavioral health and substance use disorder.The Incarceration Prevention and Reduction Task Force has worked since 2015 to increase resources to address underlying causes of incarceration in order to prevent incarceration outright-and lead people out of the criminal legal system and into supportive services, reducing the chances of re-incarceration.The Task Force is responsible for reviewing Whatcom County's criminal legal and behavioral health programs and making specific recommendations on evidence-based programs and approaches to safely and effectively serve people first-reducing racial disparities in the system and the incarceration of individuals struggling with mental illness and substance use disorder.Copyright 2022 Whatcom County, Washington.
