

Odette Marie Baptiste

August 4, 1945 - September 4, 2026

New Orleans, Louisiana

Odette Marie Baptiste died in New Orleans on September 4, 2026. She was eighty-one. Born there on August 4, 1945, she grew up speaking a house French that the school later tried to iron out of her, and she kept enough of it to season a kitchen and a joke. She learned to sew before she learned to drive. A needle, she said, did not talk back, and it paid when the hotel season was thin.

She made hems, uniforms, and funeral clothes in a front room that smelled of starch and coffee, then spent twenty years in a Quarter hotel sewing room that other people put their names on. People came with a plastic bag of someone else's measurements and left with a garment that fit the living body, not the hanger. She cooked for her church without putting her name on a committee list. Red beans, rice, a sheet cake that vanished before the blessing was finished - she treated a parish supper as work that had to be done right.

She married Alphonse Baptiste in 1966. They raised three children in a shotgun that grew a porch because the first one filled with cousins. Alphonse drove a truck and died in 2001. Odette kept the house, the garden of peppers, and the habit of sending a plate next door when she cooked too much, which was most evenings. She watched the same second-line from a chair long after she stopped dancing.

Grandchildren remember a woman who corrected their French gently and their manners less gently, who kept a cigar box of buttons as if it were a bank, and who did not waste a scrap of cloth or a kind word. She died in New Orleans, in the heat she had always said she preferred to a clean cold. The church kitchen will be louder without her and less sure of the salt.

Services

A rosary and funeral Mass in New Orleans. The family welcomes a favorite hymn and a dish for the hall afterward.
